•Victory Garden Individual Borrowing Program

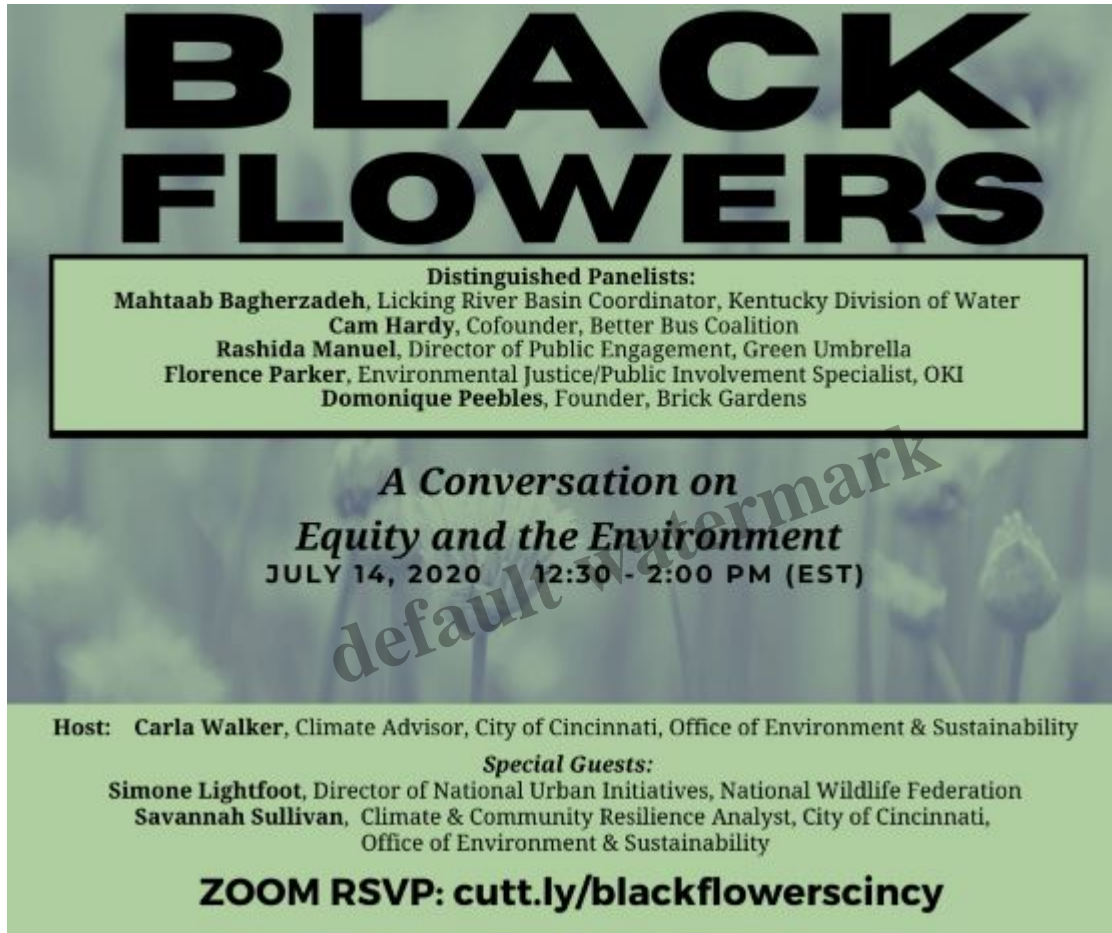

Victory Gardens came into popularity during World War I and World War II in an effort to ease the pressure that was placed on the public food supply. Individuals were encouraged to plant fruits and vegetables on their own and on public land. The effects of COVID-19 have resulted in a similar burden on our food supply, and as a result we are encouraging community members to empower themselves through the construction their own food gardens.

The Cincinnati ToolBank will be opening a gardening-specific inventory for individuals to borrow in order to construct and maintain a victory garden. Tools will be available to borrow through October 31st.

Please contact our Community Engagement Coordinator, Samantha Norton, at 513.246.0015. Or for a quicker response, please email her at samantha.norton@toolbank.org to learn more about our guidelines, available tools and to apply for this exciting pilot program.

•Zoom and listen to Black Flowers

The poster features a background of green flowers. At the top, the words "BLACK FLOWERS" are written in large, bold, black capital letters. Below this, a white box with a black border contains the names and titles of the distinguished panelists. The central text is in a serif font, including the title "A Conversation on Equity and the Environment" and the date and time "JULY 14, 2020 12:30 - 2:00 PM (EST)". At the bottom, the host and special guests are listed, followed by the Zoom RSVP link in bold black text. A large, semi-transparent watermark reading "default watermark" is overlaid diagonally across the center of the poster.
