New School Montessori Preprimary students are building their “core” by improving focus, coordination and muscle strength. We find that children have a remarkable ability to concentrate on their work. In the photos you can observe how they build this focus while also building their muscles and hand-eye coordination through stacking blocks, controlling forward progression during a bear crawl along a taped line, and by weaving ribbons in and out of wire shelving. These and other important lessons ready them for writing and for learning other skills that will serve them throughout their lives – whatever work they choose.
